

2009 Zero Share of Cost Medi-Cal Program for Children with Disabilities

Many children with disabilities are eligible for Medi-Cal with no share of cost under the Aged & Disabled Federal Poverty Level (A&D FPL) program. If the child is above the income allowed, the child does not qualify.¹ Resources have to be within what is allowed under SSI. You cannot spend down to qualify for this program.

The child with a disability in the following families will qualify in 2009:

Parent with one child: Qualifies if gross earned income is not more than $3,551 a month.

Parent with two children: Qualifies if gross earned income is not more than $3,851 a month.

Two parents with one or two children: Qualifies if gross earned income is not more than $4,219 a month.

Two parents with four children: Qualifies if gross earned income is not more than $4,869 a month.

If there are health insurance premium payments for anyone in the family and the income is earned income, the ceiling would be increased by twice the amount of those payments.

The Medi-Cal program determines whether a child who meets the SSI definition of disability qualifies by following these steps: First, Medi-Cal determines the amount of the family's countable earned and unearned income. The deductions include any insurance premium payments for the family. Second, Medi-Cal deducts a maintenance need allowance for the family members other than the child with a disability. For instance, for a family with two parents and four children or a family of 6, Medi-Cal would deduct a maintenance need allowance for five people or $1259. Third, what is left over is the amount attributed to the child. Fourth, if what is left over is not more than the federal poverty level for one person ($903 in 2009) plus $230 (the special income deduction for an individual), the child qualifies.

¹ If the family income is earned income and a little above the cut-off, you can reduce your countable income if there is a cafeteria plan through work for unreimbursed medical expenses and childcare. Money put in such an account does not count because you do not pay Social Security FICA taxes on that money.
